

Profometer Corrosion

Potential field measurement for artworks

The Profometer Corrosion potential field measurement is widely used by engineering companies for checking the corrosion potential in concrete structures like parking decks, beams, floors and roofs.

However, another recent application has been the testing of artworks - for example, to ascertain the stability of 100-year old concrete statues.

Example conducted by the University of Kassel in Germany on a statue dating back to 1911.

- Go to product website
- Contact us